

Yesterday I had a great afternoon.....

After consulting with several to make sure, that it was ok and all was clear my husband and I travelled out to the church to do some recording of my organ playing. Our minister reminded me last thing before I left Peterborough, that I couldn't have more than five out there in total. You will understand why I am mentioning this a little later.

We arrived at the church and locked the door behind us and immediately entered another world, one filled with 'peace and quiet'. Wonderful, I thought, great start to our afternoon.

I opened up the organ and with my music sat down to play, to become totally lost in the 'peace, quiet and reverence' of the church sanctuary. For many years now, my Lord has given me the gift of being able to become so engrossed in my music, that I am able to forget and become totally unaware of anything that is happening around. Once again this took place and I was unaware of either the time or the outside world, which in this time of difficulty is important.

The only thing I did become aware of was that before long I realized that my husband and I were alone in the building. Oh, oh I had been warned ahead of time, but too late now they were already here. No social distancing observed.....it was right on the organ keys beside my fingers. I was delighted, because I immediately realized, that it was a sure sign of Spring. There were delightful little lady bugs crawling in the windows everywhere and flying here and there.

This 'time out' was truly an enjoyable and refreshing time. My Lord has blessed me abundantly and I thank Him daily.
